

The SafeWise Report released its "100 Safest Cities in America" report this week. To compile this report, SafeWise used the most recent FBI crime data from 2013 to analyze and rank these cities, which all have a minimum population of 10,000 people.

"Widening the safest cities concept from a state-by-state analysis to include all of America seemed like the next logical step at SafeWise," SafeWise security analyst Mike Strayer said. "That said, I think it's safe to say we didn't expect to see so many innovative, community-safety programs thriving all around the U.S. independently of one another."
